

Heading towards a collaborative society: professions, institutions, civil society on Thursday April 21st, 2022 at 5:00 p.m. CET

Today the world is deeply affected by the disrupting effects of a constant social, economic, environmental, and institutional crisis and its resulting conflicts. Can Collaboration-based principles, practices, methods, and tools contribute to reduce its fragility and encourage aspirations of equity, inclusion, and respect by transforming conflict into a resource that can fuel individual and collective responsibility?

Can such principles become assets of a larger number of social and economic players both at institutional and non-institutional level, enabling them to advocate inclusive and participated action?

This webinar will investigate the crucial role that knowledge and professions may play in the framework of the current radical and relentless transformations, focusing on their limits and potential in the scope of legal, economic, urbanistic and relational skills.
